Now read the story,

Read to find out how Tom got the boys to white wash for him.
"Tom! Tom!" Aunt Polly's call was loud. A little noise made her look in the corner. There he was behind the door, his face sticky with cake, all the way to his ears.

As she started to hit him, Tom said, "My! Look behind you, Aunt Polly."

As she did, Tom ran out and jumped clean over the fence.

Aunt Polly smiled to herself. "That boy! How many times he's tricked me. I'm not hard enough on him. But when I remember he has no mother, I just can't be." Out loud she said, "He'll play hookey from school today. I'll just have to make him work on Saturday."

At supper, Aunt Polly questioned, "Tom, was it warm in school?"

"Yes, Aunt Polly."

"Didn't you want to go swimming?"

"Well — not much."

Aunt Polly put her hand on his head. Tom went on, "Us boys put water on our hair."

"Let me see your shirt where I sewed it on you." Tom showed her.

"Well, OK. It's still sewed together at the neck. I thought for sure you had pulled out the thread to go swimming."

Tom's younger brother, Sid, looked up, "I thought you sewed his shirt with white thread, but it's black."

"I did sew with white!"

As Tom ran out, he called at Sid, "I'll get you for that!"

Saturday morning found Tom at the front fence with a pail of white wash. He stuck the brush in and painted. He looked down to the end of the 90 feet of nine-foot fence. He looked at the tiny white part.

Tom thought of the things he would like to do on this fine spring day. And he thought of how the boys would make fun of him. He took out of his pocket everything he could trade. It was not much. Things looked dark.

Then a thought hit him. He went to work quietly, holding his thought inside his head. Along came Ben eating an apple and pretending he was a riverboat. Tom went right on white washing.

"Hello," said Ben. "Looks like you are up a tree."

No answer. Tom stepped back and looked proudly. Then he made another clean brush and looked again — like a painter of pictures.

"Hello," Ben said in Tom's ear. "So, you have to work!"

Suddenly, Tom turned around, "Oh, Ben! I didn't see you."

"I'm going swimming," said Ben. "Don't you wish you didn't have to work?"

"What's work?" asked Tom. "Why, white washing is," said Ben.

"Maybe and maybe not," answered Tom. "Anyway, I like it. Not every day a boy gets to white wash a fence so nice and clean."

Tom went on painting and looking proudly at his work.

After a while, Ben fell for Tom's game. "Let me white wash a little, Tom."

Tom almost gave him the brush. "No, Ben. I guess not. Not one boy in 1000 can do it just right for Aunt Polly."

"Oh, please," said Ben. "I'll try hard. I'll even give you my apple."

Tom slowly handed over the brush, as if he didn't want to. Inside he was dancing.

There was no end to the painters who came by and fell in. Tom's trading pile got bigger and bigger. The fence was white washed three times over, top to ground.

Aunt Polly was so pleased, she gave Tom an apple. On his way out, he took a cookie.
