Now read the story.

Read to find out how much Robinson Crusoe wanted to go to sea.
I was almost 19 when I set foot on that first ship. It was on September 1, 1651. I had walked two days from my home in York, England, down to the sea. Now I was off to London on my first sea trip.

All my life I had had deep inside me this great longing to go to sea. It was like a great tree root growing deep within me, getting bigger and bigger.

My father and mother wanted me to stay home. I was their last son. One had been killed fighting for England. As for the other son, no one knew what had happened to him.

A year ago, my father had talked to me. He would do well by me. There was the big farm and lots of money for me. Crying, my father had said, "If you go to sea, you will live to be sad about it."

I really tried to stay home. But the pull of the sea was too strong.

Down at the sea, I had met a friend who took me to his father's ship. He told me to gather up my things and just come on board.

A short trip to London would let me find out for sure if I really wanted the life of the sea. Quickly, I put my bundle of clothes on board ship.

The first day at sea turned out to be a bad start. Almost at once, a strong wind blew up. It made our ship bend over and back up, again and again. I got very seasick. I was so frightened that I told myself I would surely go back home.

My father was right.

But two days later, I was feeling fit and fine again. The wind was quiet. The tiny waves danced in the sun. The sea was the most beautiful thing I had ever seen. By the end of five days, the call of the sea was as strong as ever.

Then came a wind blowing so hard the wrong way that we could not go the way we wanted. After eight days, the wind turned into a terrible storm. Our ship rolled and rocked. Water came in faster than we could get it out. Everyone was frightened. There was nothing to do but leave the ship. The owner fired the guns for help and shouted, "Everyone gather on top!" At last, a small boat came and took us off. With the wind and the waves high around us, we looked back at our ship. It had snapped into pieces! In just 15 minutes, it went down into the stormy sea!

Rowing very hard, we got to land at last. We reached and took hold of some little tree roots sticking out and pulled our little boat up close. If they had snapped off, we would have fallen into the water. But we were lucky.

The people in the town gave us food, clothes, and money. They took us into their homes. How glad we were to be safe!

Two days later, out walking, I saw my friend again. That was when he told his father that I had gone on this trip just to find out if I liked seagoing.

On hearing this, his father said to me, "Young man, you should never go to sea again! Take this as a sign to you."

Then the owner thought about his ship down at the bottom of the sea. "Why," he said, "maybe we lost our ship because of you. Never again will I set foot on the same ship with you!"

When next I saw him, the owner was more kindly. But still he said, "Young man, DO NOT go to sea. If you do, only bad things will happen to you. Many times you will think of your father's words."

But again, I would not listen to my head. Why? I really can't say. My will just would not bend. Picking up my bundle of clothes, off I went, walking to London.
